PADDINGTON HOUSE BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL, Port Piper Road, Paddington, near Sydney. The Rev. G. H. STANLEY, M.A. and L.L.D., School a limited number of boys, to whose mental and moral training he devotes special personal attention.

Paddington House is admirably adapted for educational purposes, and has excellent accommodation for boarders. It is situated in a peculiarly healthy neighbourhood, is well equipped with the prevailing wind, and has belonging to it a spacious garden, and a large paddock which is used as a playground.

Dr. Stanley's object is to make learning not a mechanical task, or a mere diligent exercise of memory, but a healthy and harmonious training of the faculties. He aims at giving to his pupils the knowledge, and helping them to form the habits of thought and action, which will enable them to carry out their own education in after life, and to fill their places in society with credit and advantage.

The course of instruction for youths intended for business includes the English Language and Literature, Composition, correct Reading and Speaking, History, Geography, Natural Science, Arithmetic, Book-keeping, with French or German if required. The course for more advanced students, or for those intended for the learned professions, includes also Latin, Greek, and Mathematics. More than usual prominence is given to subjects connected with the Southern Hemisphere, and especially to the geography, productions, institutions, and resources of the Australian colonies. Every facility is afforded for the formation of exact ideas by the use of objects, models, diagrams, and pictures.

The masters, health, and general behaviour of the pupils are strictly watched over by Dr. and Mrs. Stanley, and the latter superintends all the domestic arrangements. The religious spirit is made as far as possible to pervade every branch of instruction, but all disputed and sectarian points are studiously excluded. The school is intended to attract the places of worship that are selected by their parents or guardians.

TERMS - PAYABLE QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE. Per quarter, Day pupils £14 0 0

Boarders (under ten years) £3 0 0

Boarders (over ten years) £6 0 0

than half the money. Moreover, not only did the progeny of Stockwell run first in the Two Thousand, the One Thousand, the Derby, and the Leger; but in the Two Thousand, the second, Monarch of the Glen, was begotten by Stockwell; in the Derby, the second and third, Savernake and Rustic, were begotten by Stockwell; and in the Leger, the second, Sayernkate, was begotten by Stockwell. As for Stockwell's favourite daughter, Achievement, if we count up the races in which she has run as a two-year-old, we find that they are thirteen in number—to wit, the Beaton Stakes, Newmarket, 1275; the Grand Stand Plate, Ascot, 1645; the Woodcote Stakes, Epsom,

1685; the Fourteenth Triennial Stakes, Ascot, £457; the New Stakes, ditto, £760; the July Stakes, Newmarket, £1900; the Chesterfield, ditto, £1330; the Lavant, Goodwood, £1000; the Champagne, Doncaster, £1225; the Hopeful, Newmarket, £750; the Charwell, ditto, £980; the Middle Park Plate, ditto, £4840; and the Criterion, ditto, £1310; and she was only beaten twice, when she ran (giving away weight) second to Plaudit for the Clearwell, and second to the Rake for the Middle Park; so that (if our figures can be depended upon) she won eleven races out of thirteen, and £10,337 out of £16,157, which has been declared by a facetious turtle to be "pretty well, considering the odds."

"make a noise," which is a jocular way of hinting that she is a "roarer," that the best of her has been seen, and that there is no colt to keep up the credit of Stockwell next year; but the family of Stockwell have so acquitted themselves during the past season as to win for their father the title of King of the Stud.

Whether the great Gladiator, equal to the immortals, be destined in course of time to oust Stockwell from the throne is a secret hidden from human ken: "Prudens futuri temporis exitum Caliginosâ nocte premit Deus."

MR. VERDON.

(From the Times, November 23rd)
On Wednesday evening a dinner was given to Mr. Verdon, the Finance Minister of Victoria, under circumstances well worthy of notice. The Australian Settlements have been, perhaps, our most successful experiments in colonization. In them this country possesses dependencies which, from small beginnings, have advanced quickly to greatness, are now among the most flourishing and hopeful regions of the globe. The Australian colonists are numerous, wealthy, enterprising, and loyal. There never have been people owing allegiance to the Queen who have done so much for the mother country and have given it less trouble. The Australians take our exports largely, and send us in return not only great quantities of the goods we iron and the fact that only a few quantities of the above-mentioned metal, but the wool which is one of the staples of the national manufacture. Since the first settlement was made on the beach at Sydney the Colonies have had no serious dispute with the Home Government. Downing-street has sometimes done its worst to provoke people accustomed to ideas of self-government, but every controversy has ended peacefully, and at the present time it is said there is no quarter of the Queen's dominions where British institutions and the British connexion are more popular than at the Antipodes. Nor is this, we are bound to say, on account of any special favour shown by England to her latest offspring. Australia has had little of the pampering and honouring which some colonies have received. For years there have been but few British troops on that island con-timely, Edwards have been waged for the benefit of local contractors and hucksters, no jobs have been favoured by home politicians. The new country has been left to its own vast resources and the free enterprise of the multitudes who have flocked to it, and the consequence is that the colonies have formed their own destiny, and the people respect the mother country all the more because they do not feel themselves as dependant.

Among these colonies the first place must be given to Victoria, which, though not the most ancient, is the most populous and prosperous. Gold has done much; the natural advantages of soil and climate have come in aid of it. If, then, Mr. Verdon merely represented a young and growing community of our own race and language, he ought to be heartily welcome. But one of the objects of his visit to England is of a nature which should interest all who think of the future of this empire, and the relations which its widely-sundered parts must in other times bear to one another. It must be evident to any one who has considered the subject that the question of colonial defence is one of the most serious that can occupy the attention of a statesman. It seems an anomaly and an abuse that the people of this country, heavily taxed, and for the most part striving hard to support themselves, should have to insure some fifty communities in various quarters of the globe, not only from foreign attack, but from domestic tumult, not only from the ravages of European fleets, but from the very marauder who may happen to infect the coast. They colonial system is, as its critics justly remark, founded on principles essentially unjust. Into whatever region of the United States territory an American citizen may wander he still contributes to the support of the Republic. If he pays taxes to the Central Government in Massachusetts, he equally pays them in Kansas or Minnesota. Hence the Union is strengths by migration, and has nothing to fear from the flow of population from one State to another. But with us it is very different. Every man who leaves the United Kingdom for Canada, or Australia, or New Zealand, ceases to contribute to the support of British fleets and armies, or to the payment of the national debt, or to the maintenance of the national institutions. Yet he is entitled to be de-reduced by the whole power of the Empire, and to this privilege he owes it that the young community of which he forms part is free from all fear of danger from the full-grown foreign Powers. He knows that while he bears allegiance to the Queen of England, no European Power dare treat him as Spain has treated Chili, and yet this great advantage he obtains from the taxes and privations of his fellow-countrymen at home.

ard without exertion or expenditure on his part. This anomaly has made some politicians conclude that a colonial empire is a mistake altogether, and that if Englishmen choose to wander forth from the mother country they should take their chance from the beginning.

arguments for a disruption of the Empire which are based upon the unequal burdens borne by the Englishmen as a time loss a portion of their force. With the exception of British North America, in which it is to be hoped that before long independence will follow confederation, there is hardly any colony which needs so much either for army or navy. We say distinctly that Canada and N.

the fault of the Colonial Office, which would not allow the colonies to manage their savage neighbours in their own way. But whatever expenses this country may have will be lessened if the colonies carry out the principle of the recent Act for the formation of local navies. Victoria has set the example in this respect. One of the objects of Mr. Verdon's mission is to ask that one of the new navies wooden ship of war now lying in our harbours should be given to the colony as a training ship for the encouragement of a local navy; and, secondly, that we should contribute part of the funds and also the necessary designs and inspection to enable the colony to construct an armour-plated ship for the defence of its chief harbours. Sir John Pakington has very wisely assented

The colony of Victoria has its Volunteers on land, and they are sufficient to make the presence of British troops during peace all but unnecessary. The same colony now establishes a naval force to be maintained at its own expense, and only asks us for an assistance which may easily be given. We may hope that this is a short time.

and that we may see the end of one of the most costly and useless systems that ever were devised,—the incessant cruising of a number of British vessels of all sorts and sizes on the vain pretence of protecting the colonies. Come what may, there must be a revolution in our naval system; for, if once public attention be roused to the subject, no House of Commons will continue to sanction it.

Here is something very droll in the Gazette Musicale. "Appropos," says the writer, "of the coming musical ance of 'Der Freischütz,' at the Théâtre Lyrique, the journals announce that the score of Weber's chef-d'œuvre will be performed, for the first time, as written by the famous composer. This is a mistake; 'Der Freischütz' was represented at the Opera in 1841, just as Weber composed it. Not one note of the music was changed, and M. Reyer's condition of M. Leon Pillet, as a sine qua non before undertaking the recitatives, which were to replace the spoken dialogue." Then Weber composed M. Berlioz's recitatives! Need it be said that by such a substitution an opera is essentially if not virtually transformed? We have never relished of all, with the uncouth and unvoiced onset of M. Berlioz, which, be it recollected, were, in London, found so unmanageable that when the work was produced at our Royal Italian Opera others had to be written.—Athenaeum.

(From the Times, November 21.)
The problem of Recruiting for the British Army is a perennial one, and one which has of late years become more acute than ever. The Royal Commission, which was appointed to inquire into the subject, has now published its report, and it is interesting to see how well the various measures which have been suggested have been carried out. The Commission has found that the present system of recruiting is defective in many respects, and that it is necessary to make some radical reforms. The first of these is to increase the number of recruits, and to make the process of recruiting more efficient. The Commission has suggested that the Government should establish a recruiting office in each of the principal towns, and that it should employ a large number of recruiting officers. These officers should be selected from the ranks of the army, and should be given the necessary training and authority. They should be empowered to visit the various districts, and to recruit men from the ranks of the militia and the volunteers. The Commission has also suggested that the Government should establish a recruiting office in each of the principal towns, and that it should employ a large number of recruiting officers. They should be empowered to visit the various districts, and to recruit men from the ranks of the militia and the volunteers.

At a meeting of the working classes in Dublin, Mr. Bright gave the following detailed description of his scheme for buying up and redistributing the large estates which are now held by a few landlords. The scheme has been much discussed, and it is interesting to see how well it has been carried out. The Commission has found that the present system of recruiting is defective in many respects, and that it is necessary to make some radical reforms. The first of these is to increase the number of recruits, and to make the process of recruiting more efficient. They should be empowered to visit the various districts, and to recruit men from the ranks of the militia and the volunteers.

The success of the Prussian army in the campaign with Austria has already produced a vast effect upon all the principal armies of Europe. While our own army is not yet so well equipped as the Prussian, it is nevertheless a formidable force. The Commission has found that the present system of recruiting is defective in many respects, and that it is necessary to make some radical reforms. The first of these is to increase the number of recruits, and to make the process of recruiting more efficient. actually on we might thus secure perhaps half a score of volunteers, whose services would be of great value. A NOVEL IDEA—LIFE-SAVING WATER-TANKS.
(From the New York Herald.)
A Mr. George Thompson, late of the United States Navy, has given the following as a means to save life in case of shipwreck, and recommends his plan as being superior to boats, rafts, or any other contrivance yet invented. The plan is to construct a large number of water-tanks, which should be placed on the shore, and which should be connected by a system of pipes. In case of shipwreck, the water-tanks should be opened, and the water should be allowed to flow into the sea. The water-tanks should be constructed of iron, and should be placed on the shore, and should be connected by a system of pipes. In case of shipwreck, the water-tanks should be opened, and the water should be allowed to flow into the sea.

THE JAMAICA MASSACRE.
(From the Standard, November 16.)
The news from Jamaica during the past week, that the late Governor-General, Sir John Pendergast, had been appointed to the post of Governor-General of the United Kingdom, is a matter of great interest. The Commission has found that the present system of recruiting is defective in many respects, and that it is necessary to make some radical reforms. The first of these is to increase the number of recruits, and to make the process of recruiting more efficient. The Commission has suggested that the Government should establish a recruiting office in each of the principal towns, and that it should employ a large number of recruiting officers.
